What's Hot Today:

China solar: Supply chain price flat (Week 19, 2025)

According to InfoLink, prices in the solar supply chain continued the weakness on a WoW basis. On a YoY comparison, prices for polysilicon, wafers, cells, and modules dropped by 14%, 35%, 20%, and 23% YoY, respectively.

It is reported that ingot manufacturers are still focusing on inventory depletion to gain leverage in April and May. The overall wafer market sentiment remained bearish. With sluggish end-user demand which pressure cell prices, downward pressure on wafer prices has yet to ease. Price negotiations for cells and modules remained tense, with some leading cell makers trying to support prices. Even though current prices have fallen below the average cost line, the severe supply-demand imbalance suggests that prices may drop further.

If production levels do not adjust in May, prices could still fall back to the lows seen in the second half of 2024, potentially dragging down wafer prices. Future demand on solar module in the second half of this year will depend on the progress of large-base projects. With demand remaining uncertain, manufacturers are offering giveaways and price concessions in recent negotiations.

Our view - Given the prolonged structural adjustments in the solar industry, we are of the view that near-term risk for the sector persists. However, the 90-day tariff ease on Chinese goods by the US may provide a short-term trading opportunity for company such as Xinyi Solar (968 HK, HK$2.63, HK$23.9bn) which is trading at about 12.2x forward PE.
